

I am very concerned that if Bell South is granted its petition to have the regulation of broadband service stopped that my own ISP and personal internet experience would suffer greatly. I am fortunate to have a local ISP which is very effective and responsive to my needs. I am concerned that this would be the beginning of many more large phone companies to do the same. The smaller ISP's have made the internet what it is today because of their ability to locally support their customers. I hope that the FCC will consider keeping the broadband services regulated so that unfair competitive practices do not take place and drive up my cost of DSL connectivity through my local ISP.

Thank you for your consideration,
